

Maldives? Now Please!

Halloween on the Island

SOME TIMES V247

HALLOWEEN IS CELEBRATED ON CAMP EACH YEAR!

Sometimes, living on this island reminds me of the USA in the 1970's. Take trick or treating for example. The entry gates around the island are closed. No visitors are allowed from after school until about midnight. Many of the US houses are decorated like the one above. The families haul new decorations over from the USA or similar to Christmas decor, the halloween decorations are passed on from family to family as they leave the island over the years.

Families and groups of children dressed up in all types of costumes roam the dark streets on the island. So weird! It hasn't been that way since the 70's. Imagine, walking around in the dark for trick or treating.

TRUNK OR TREAT

This makes me laugh so hard. Trunk or Treat? I guess this happened during Covid last year and it's happened in years past. First time I've heard the phrase. Supposedly, a huge group of parents got together in one of the company parking lots for a few hours on Halloween. It's like tailgating for a Packer Game without all the snow, no game, and no Packers. But each family decks out their ride with some scary decorations and scoops out tons of candy for the kids. It's all in one place so there is no safety issue. Although, the company security squashed all the fun and made the truckers disperse. They don't really know about Halloween. Most of the Saudi families consider it against Islam so they don't participate. Half of the Muslim students don't come to school on October 31, so the admin tries to be inclusive and celebrate "color day" or "spirit day" instead of Halloween. That doesn't stop the trunk party though! I say.... KEEP ON TRUNKING!

Trunk or Treat !

WHAT IS THAT MISTER?

I even put a sticker on my shirt that said "PCR TEST". Although I got quite a few laughs from the staff and at least two adults falling over laughing, the kids didn't get it. Yeah, they don't have to get PCR tests yet, but the HAVE seen their parents get them. The kids have had to wait in line for their parents to get multiples. Why do I have to explain? Epic failure for this year I guess. It wasn't worth keeping it on post lunch. Didn't want to explain anymore. This was inspired by my last PCR test.

IT'S STILL COVIDCATION

We still have to wear masks indoors. Ugh. I still have to sign up for socially distanced swimming times. Can't people just figure this shit out? Why why why? What is this, Florida? How many cases do we have? Another teacher was just announced as having to teach online for two weeks because there is a chance that one of his students' brothers just tested positive. Glad I don't teach that class. What? Plan extra for the online class? No spank u.

AWESOME LIBRARIANS

Is is a rare moment when one of the librarians is NOT in a good mood. I even get a new raunchy joke shared with me every morning! Oh Librarians, what would I do without you right next door to my lab?

CB is the wife of one of the most fun dudes in the world. The Cat on the right is a former Canadian Olympian - and she's married to another Olympian.

Why didn't the skeleton go to the halloween party?

He had no body to go with.

TRUNK OR TREAT

There are a ton of things to do on this island for families and couples. Usually, families hang out with each other, travel together, babysit for each other. Being single means you aren't normally invited to parties, trunk or treats, or dinners.

TWICE THE LAUGHS - TWICE THE SMELLS

My oldest niece had twins in Minnesota last summer in August. Now look at these two little stinkers! I'm actually wondering how they got the girls to pose for this. Did they just lie them face first on the carpet and take quick pic before they started rolling around? Your guess is as good as mine.

"MY SPIDER SENSE IS TINGLING"

Matt, what a great costume! Or is that Stacy? As for the boys...which one is not like the others? Are they going on a Bear Hunt? Like the book? Sorry I missed ya'll this year.

This was one of my favorite costumes for Halloween's Eve this year. She said, "Mr. Lemoine, I can't even sit down in this thing." It's just lucky she only had the costume on after lunch.

